

ECHOing Across Virginia

Protecting children through equal access to child abuse resources

A series of child abuse identification and evaluation educational programs led by specialists at Children's Hospital of Richmond at VCU.

The Virginia Department of Health Project ECHO[®] connects community providers with specialists in regular, real-time, collaborative sessions revolutionizing medical education and exponentially increasing workforce capacity to provide best-practice specialty care and reduce health disparities.

This series consists of six 75-minute programs that include a lecture, question and answer period, and case presentation. The series will be offered three times, with a maximum of 150 participants each session. CME units will be provided for physicians, nurse practitioners, registered nurses, teachers, and social workers practicing in Virginia.
